PhreakNIC is Nashville's free annual hacker con. Anyone is welcome to attend. We create an environment for people who are interested in the more underground elements of technology to meet, exchange ideas, teach what they know and (hopefully) learn.

The primary focus is on computers and computer security, but other topics this year will probably include:

- low-power/community radio; how it's being implemented and what groups are trying to kill it (hint: the NAB and the RIAA);
- the search for extra-terrestrial intelligence and how you can get involved, by simply crunching cycles to building your own earth station from old Ku-band satellite TV dishes;
- privacy, civil liberties and civil disobedience, especially with regard to drug testing;
- and, of course, computer and network security, root wars, amateur robotics and high power rocketry, cryptography, biotechnology, how to kill spammers dead and fabulous door prizes.
