PhreakNIC is Nashville's FREE annual hacker convention. Anyone is welcome to attend. We create an environment where people who are interested in the more underground elements of technology can meet, exchange ideas, teach what they know and (hopefully) learn.

The primary focus is on computers and computer security, but other topics this year will include:

- who killed low-power/community radio and why (hint: the NAB, see <http://www.nab.org>); how you can fight back;
- using Linux in embedded applications and even as a fully configurable PBX
- turning old satellite TV systems into computer-controlled radio telescopes;
- new and developing distribution models for intellectual property such as music, books and movies; guerilla tools like gnutella, freenet and nupur/open-nap servers; emerging data havens; who opposes them;
- a Linux/BSD installfest; kick the Microshaft^H^H^H^Hoft habit!
- gaming LANs and how to win so consistently online that your opponents will accuse you of being a bot.
